

“Reading in the Matrix”

Time after time, Querents (a French word meaning “Seeker,” describing a person with an inquiry into the Spirit world, aka the Quantum world) will come to me searching for a remarkable encounter with the truly mystical. But what is “mystical” but that which is beyond the boundaries of our familiar programming?

Sometimes I’m just as surprised as they are!

Most of my clients have experienced many moments with me when there is a flash of such clear synchronicity between us in the quantum realm that sometimes I’m just as surprised as they are at the impeccable detail I can provide. I remind them that it’s not about me having some bizarre supernatural power in this situation – it’s actually their willingness to be open to being read for, combined with my ability to get my personal self (i.e. thoughts and feelings) out of the way, that unlocks the gateway to dimensions not readily experienced in ordinary existence. Does it matter how close we are in proximity when we do the reading? Not at all! In the subatomic world there is no time or space dividing our existence. Can you feel the Oneness?

I dearly love my angels and guides – they really deliver!

There’s so much that happens in a quantum psychic reading it’s like throwing away the menu and having the whole buffet brought to your table. I dearly love my angels and guides – they really do deliver! Depending on the specific reading for each individual, I might be called upon to do any of the following:

- Body Scanning
- Speaking with Spirit
- Talking to the Deceased
- Predicting the Future
- Remote Viewing
- Course Correcting
- A Variety of Divination Techniques
- Karmic Recognition
- Past Life Recycling
- So much more ...

If a Querent expresses interest in learning how to recognize and play within the matrix themselves, I am happy to work with them on developing these skills. “Give a man a fish and you feed him for a day; teach a man to fish and you feed him for a lifetime.” I teach both private and group classes for anyone who wants to get jiggy in the matrix – nothing fishy about it!

It's breath-taking. "Oh my!" I say.

A new client has scheduled a phone reading with me. I call them for our appointment and ask them if they are in a quiet, private place where they can concentrate. I ask them if they have paper and pen handy to take notes. I explain that I've found it consistently true that I get more information when machines such as computers and tape recorders are not running EMF's through the energy matrix in close proximity. I put flame to a white candle and perhaps another color candle as well, chanting our request for clear connection to the Akashic Records aka the Book of Life aka the Source of Course. Crystals, candles, sage, my sacred medicine bowls, my crystal ball (of course), and all other accoutrements in place, I lay out the Querent's astrology chart and begin to shuffle the Tarot cards and, as I do, the visions start pouring in and the audio begins to emit a frequency I can attune to. It's breath-taking. "Oh my!" I say, at which point I can hear all breathing stop on the other end of the phone as well. Anticipation on both our parts fuels an even deeper and profoundly esoteric reading.

At times I can even see the underwear they have on!

I love to be a clear channel for my clients to talk with their angels and guides. I've experienced both extremes from feeling completely blocked to a particular person (usually repairable) to having such broad access to so much information on the subatomic level that at times I can even see ("see" meaning as "in a vision") the color and pattern of the underwear they have on (assuming they're wearing any). This has been known to make some people feel slightly uncomfortable, and others jealous. Let me assure you that I don't walk around peering psychically at everyone's unmentionables. But this x-ray type vision does make me a pretty decent body-scanner so I can help discern if a woman is pregnant or identify other possible physical concerns some folks might have. If the TSA would let me train their security crew just think about how safe your flight would be! Almost as safe as Naked Air!

We all have the potential to achieve direct contact with Source.

Can I always know in advance how a person will react to such an unexplainable connection? Not always, no, because some come only to learn of the possibility of this true connection with Source and yet they may or may not be prepared to process it fully. Like a seed planted in the earth, how well it will grow is dependent on many factors such as how fertile the soil is, how tilled and prepared it is to receive such a seed of possibility, and whether, going forward, it will get enough light and nourishment to flourish. Others who are already aware that they're plugged in to Source are more likely to process the incoming information smoother and faster. Neither way is better. It's been my experience that we all have the potential to rise through each level, through many lifetimes, to achieve the ultimate high – direct contact with Source.

Do I always know what I'm looking for when I open the door?

In order to get a good reading in the matrix, I have to be able to see into it. It's like going to the refrigerator for the ingredients needed to make supper. First I have to open the door, then have a look inside, move some things around, and find the most important items. Do I always know what I'm looking for when I open the door? No way! Maybe a Querent has a question and I enter the matrix in search of an answer for that particular question, yet I may come across all kinds of good info for them about other areas in their lives while I'm looking for the answer to their original question. Kind of like coming across a box of fudge while looking for a jar of mustard.

I like to confirm that I've successfully "jacked in" to the matrix.

I like to confirm that I've successfully "jacked in" to the matrix and am deep-viewing my Querent's electromagnetic grid for real by asking a couple of verifiable questions right out of the gate. I did a phone reading for a wonderful gal the other day that had a beautiful hologram running in her grid. It made it so easy to confirm our connection. I asked her, "Do you have a room in your home that's like a sunroom-porch type room full of plants?" She said, "Yes, and I was going to sit in there for the reading but I wanted to sit at a table to make it easier to take notes." I then asked if she was sitting in a wooden chair with a woven wicker seat. She confirmed that she was indeed. Ok, then I knew I was in and we proceeded to have a crystal clear reading. This step usually helps to create more trust coming from the Querent as well. It's perhaps a little easier to believe a psychic prediction coming from someone who can see you through a telephone line from two or two thousand miles away.

It might take a little more time or a different approach.

Sometimes it takes a little longer for me to get to something recognizable in a Querent's grid. So I just take a little more time or approach from a different chakra opening. There have been a couple of times with certain folks, when time and energy were outweighing results, that I simply referred them to a psychic they might have a better connection with. There are many excellent psychic readers out there.

I don't mind committing to a prediction into the future.

Predicting the future is always a trip via probability drive. I know many psychics who would rather steer clear of predicting the future because of how easily one little change in the pathway can alter everything up ahead. I don't mind committing to a prediction into the future because my guides are so good at counting cards, lol! Just kidding – we don't gamble, especially not with someone's life or destiny. My guides are really great with both odds and timing, however. For this I feel blessed in a big way. I've also had some amazing teachers in this department, but that's a whole 'nuther story. If the train does switch tracks along the way then we can usually figure out how and why and either get it back on the right track or let it ride if it's heading in a better direction. We are, I believe, divinely guided, and the engineer usually has a good reason for jumping tracks.

My job is to provide data for who, what, when, where, how, and why.

Timing is a crazy thing when we psychic readers are trying to nail down an exact "when" something is going to happen. In the spirit world time doesn't exist in the same way it does for us here in 3D earth time. It can be frustrating if we don't have a tried and true method to use for calculating month, day, and year. People need to know who, what, when, where, how, and why. My job is to provide data for all of these aspects of their question(s). I can only do this if Spirit approves my request for the info and grants me permission to share the information. There are so many variables that enter into this formula it's beyond description. Each person's reading is as unique to them as their individual variables.

99.9% of the time it happens just when my guides said it would.

My phone often rings and I get many emails from Querents who are so excited when a prediction comes true on the exact day predicted sometimes months beforehand. If you think about it, it's a weird job to predict the future given that someone is paying me to tell them about something that hasn't happened yet. How can they know if their money was well spent except to wait for days, weeks, months, possibly years on some subjects. But still the phone continues to ring and the emails and snail mail continue to pour in – 99.9% of the time I hear that it happened just as my guides had said, just when they had said it probably would.

Sometimes timing is about a “window of time.”

Sometimes timing is about a “window of time” rather than a particular day or hour. I once had a vision that a client was going to be in an auto accident, one that he couldn't avoid but could improve the outcome of. In the vision he swerved to avoid hitting a deer and ended up in a ditch, trapped in a burning car. He asked me what he could do to minimize the damage from such an accident. I suggested he probably should keep his windows open for an easy escape route and that he definitely shouldn't swerve. He wanted to know how long before the prediction expired. I told him the maximum shelf life I had ever experienced was thirty days. Twenty nine days later a deer ran out in front of his car. He didn't swerve. The deer died. He didn't. He was sad for the deer (and the front end of his Lincoln Continental) but happy he could finally roll up his car windows in the bitter Chicago November weather.

There are rules to reading in the matrix.

There are rules to reading in the matrix. Sometimes Querents ask me taboo things like when they're going to die. This is a question that no psychic has permission to answer even if they know the answer. If I see something in someone's EM grid and am told by my guides not to speak of it, I can talk around it but not directly about it. On the other hand, if my guides think I won't be able to keep silent, they might prevent me from knowing something in advance. Can you hear it now? “Why didn't you tell me the stock market was going to crash? I thought you were supposed to be psychic.” There are, without a doubt, some bumps along the psychic path.

Reading in the matrix can happen spontaneously.

Reading in the matrix isn't always only by special order. It can happen spontaneously as well. I sometimes have prophetic dreams. I then have to try to figure out what they mean and what to do about them. Most of the time my dreams are clear and I can help people with them. Sometimes it's better to just keep them to myself. Sometimes I don't completely understand them until after they unfold. And other times sharing them can elicit a not-so-happy result. Most of the time they're helpful and everyone is happy. Just a few months ago, however, I had a dream about a client and one of her very specific guides who asked me to deliver a message to her that she was becoming involved with some people who would cause her some ill karma in the long run. I was very uncomfortable about it, as I always am when giving unsolicited advice (which I rarely do), but her guide was so emphatic in the dream that I went forward and discussed it with her as gently as possible. She apparently felt threatened in some way in spite of my effort to speak from my heart, and though she was falsely pleasant to me on the phone (why do people try to lie to psychics?) she went on to speak poorly of me to her friends and family members afterward. Whereas most people prefer to have the heads-up, others prefer to learn the harder way and, much as I think most of us try to avoid being part of someone's harsher lessons, there are times when we get called upon to serve a higher purpose in bewildering ways – sort of like jury duty when it comes around. Since I believe that being in service to Spirit must be an unconditional deal, I accept the bad that comes with the good – it's all just perspective anyway. Every job has its ups and downs. When people choose to come from a place of fear rather than love, it doesn't take being psychic to see it.

The illusionary 3D world falls away and I can see beyond.

Take for example a lovely couple in Casper, Wyoming. She came to an annual Holistic Fair that she had been attending for years. She liked her reading so the next day she brought her husband, Bill, to see me. He'd had his astrology chart interpreted once but had never had a psychic reading before. That's when it happened, how it always happens for me - the illusionary 3D world falls away and I can suddenly see beyond like when one shifts their focus into one of those Magic Eye posters. As the dimensions began to open wide, a man appeared to be standing behind Bill. He told me his name was Jim. I repeated his name out loud. Jim told me about his occupation in the mining business and how much he had enjoyed his work and his family prior to his death in that particular lifetime. In the meantime, as I continued to repeat his words to those sitting on the edge of their chairs in the 3D world, eyes were wide and mouths were agape. It turned out that Jim was Bill's father who had passed on two years prior. I delivered Jim's message to his son – how proud he was of him and to go ahead with the purchase of their new home as things would work out very well for them. The reading ended and I never saw or heard from that lovely couple again. Perhaps it was too intense for them or perhaps that was all they needed to know. Judging by the look on their faces, though, I'd bet on the fear factor.

I've seen it scare the socks off of some folks.

When the information that comes through for me in a reading is that detailed and pinpoint accurate, this level of psychic contact is normally reassuring to most people. However, believe it or not, I've seen it scare the socks off of some folks. Reminds me of the time I was sitting next to a friend in the darkness of a new moon night and a shadowy figure appeared by the window. The way the curtains were blowing in the breeze, it took a minute for me to realize it was actually a person standing there and not an illusion created by the dancing draperies. I couldn't make out his face but I could see what he was wearing. Once I realized there was no way an actual 3D person could have entered the room without us knowing about it, and that this must indeed be someone from another dimension, I asked my friend if he had any idea who our visitor might be. After providing a detailed description of this interesting character, my friend wanted me to ask him his name. I don't often dabble in names because they usually change from lifetime to lifetime and are more difficult to pin down but I went ahead and asked. The answer was "Willis," which happened to be my friend's father's name when he was alive, although I had no prior knowledge of this. Willis had a message for his son as well – to believe there is more. But my friend freaked out. The next day he called to let me know that the only thing he "believed" was that I had done a background check on him and was deliberately pulling a prank on him in poor taste. How sad for him that he missed such a golden opportunity to re-connect with his deceased father.

From fear to love in one reading!

Not everyone who begins in fear remains in fear. Elena's visit from her grandmother is a perfect example. Elena had never had a reading before she met me. We sat together at the little wooden table in the middle of the day. I shuffled the cards and laid them out but as I did the light in the room seemed to dim ... and dim some more ... and dim some more ... until it was as if the room had been filled with a dark gray fog. Through the fog I could still see Elena but I could also see an elderly woman in a navy blue dress with white polka dots standing beside her. It must have been the look on my face that caused Elena's eyes to open so wide. In her now familiar New York accent she said, "What?! What is it?!" I told her what I was seeing, and added that I was also picking up a strong psychic scent of soap. While debating whether to run for the door or maintain her white-knuckle grip on the edge of the table, Elena was able to convey to me that her grandmother, who I had just described quite accurately, had passed on two weeks prior. As soon as she knew Elena was open to listening, her grandma started to give her details about a rosary she wanted Elena to retrieve from her apartment and keep. Two weeks later Elena brought the specified rosary to show me. How cool is that?! From fear to love in one reading!

The matrix can be a fantastic playground to explore and enjoy.

Fortunately most of the people who come to me for readings have a lot of love in their hearts and tend to become life-long clients because they love that they can talk to their dearly departed loved ones or predict when they're going to get that well-deserved promotion or get some insight into a relationship, etc. Not every reading is dramatic. The deceased don't always show up, not even sometimes when we ask ever so nicely. Health and life-death warnings aren't everyday occurrences. And it's never happened (so far) that a person's future looked so bleak that it couldn't be re-routed in a more joyous direction. In fact, most readings are pretty straight forward – who, what, when, where, how, and why. Clear questions generally get clear answers and we're all happy campers. I can tell you this for sure – I have never (so far) had a boring client or given a boring reading. The matrix can be a fantastic playground to explore and enjoy when we open our minds to it.
